Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

1. Though the paper concept is interesting, the title of the paper fails miserably in giving the core idea of the concept. I would suggest the author provide an impactful title that gives a clear-cut idea of the paper.
2. There is a lack of information on the dataset used by the authors, including how they collected it, the dataset size, and how they labelled the training dataset. Was it manual labelling or automatic labelling?
3. Social media content is affected by several linguistic peculiarities such as the use of slangs, stop words, etc., but nowhere is the data cleaning process given except for filling null values.
4. Evaluation metrics for assessing the performances of the models used are missing.
5. There is no comparison with the base model as well.
6. Authors can add handling of challenges such as negation (that can reverse the sentiment) that might improve their model effectiveness.
7. Overall, the paper seems to be theoretical; it lacks technical details.
