Although the subject is important, I found that the article lacks many scientific aspects necessary for publication. The tools for data collection were not validated, and no reliability measures were mentioned in the study. The analysis of the Likert scale is unclear, making it difficult to follow the results presented in the article. The conclusion, which should be based on the collected data, reads more like a recommendation. Overall, the article demonstrates a lack of understanding of research methodology. I advise the authors to revisit their data and revise their article to make it more readable and user-friendly.
