The paper is generally well-composed. However, incorporating the following suggestions could further enhance the article's quality for publication.

This study is structured similarly to a thesis and needs improvements in several areas. The introduction should be systematically enhanced to better establish the rationale. It isn't necessary to individually discuss each conventional air pollutant; instead, a summarized description with references to the latest research would be more effective. It should also be clear from the beginning whether the focus is on indoor or outdoor air pollution, as this detail appears only at the end and should be included in the introduction. There are too many objectives, which could be streamlined. The methods section needs more detail on the techniques used for sampling each parameter, possibly by referencing or adapting methods from other studies. Results should be clearly explained and linked to discussions of similar studies. Lastly, the references need to be meticulously reviewed to align with the journal's requirements.
