

Review of: "Mapping Welfare and Development Schemes to SDGs at the Village Level in India"

Crishelen Kurezyn Díaz<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Universidad Popular Autónoma del Estado de Puebla

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article provides enough information to give the reader a clear idea about the authors and base theories. This bibliographic review is appropriate since it provides theoretical support for everything stated. The authors have sufficient information to support their literature background, which helps them understand the topic explored.

The article discussion is complete; the authors have sought sufficient information, and the topics explored are relevant and current. The information clearly illustrates the themes as the authors explore them generally and later narrow them down to more specific issues. From the beginning of the article, the problem and all its associated elements are identified.

The authors emphasize the problems and trends from the beginning. A review is made of the various theories that have contributed to the formulation of the problem. In addition, current theories are presented that help visualize the future of the explored topic and its implications and relationships with other issues.

I consider the article very well structured and responsive to each requested element. Its main strengths are the following:

- *The problem statement is clearly described.
- *The authors and theories are very current and relevant.
- *The problem and its implications are explained in detail.
- *The definitions presented on the topics explored are precise.
- *The discussion is clear, and several proposals have been included.
- *The conclusions are consistent with what was explored during the article.