This paper provides a thorough examination of the Islamic perspective on knowledge as rooted in the Quran and the Sunnah. The abstract effectively summarizes the significance of knowledge in Islam and its role in shaping an epistemological framework. The paper delves into Quranic verses and Hadith that emphasize knowledge, offering a unique approach integrating faith, reason, and ethics. The inclusion of Said Nursi's exegesis enriches the discussion, linking traditional Islamic scholarship with contemporary concerns. The structure and content are well-organized, making a valuable contribution to the broader discourse on epistemology and human understanding within the Islamic context.
