There are many spelling and grammatical errors throughout the text; a thorough revision of this is required.

The article is generally well-structured, but it lacks many specifics, especially in providing data in the introduction, methodology, and results sections.

For example, in the introduction, there is no mention of specific previous studies that discuss the pollution levels that can be found in urban microenvironments such as universities. There are no hard data on the average concentrations found, data on emission sources, among others.

There are repeated errors in the scientific and technical nomenclature throughout the text.

Similarly, the results are quite deficient, lacking in both description and discussion, and comparison with other similar studies.

The audiovisual aids (tables and graphs) need significant improvement so that they are understandable.
